Welcome to Zoone, crossroads of the multiverse . . .

When an enormous, winged blue tiger appears on his aunt’s sofa, Ozzie can tell he’s in for an adventure. He’s thrilled to follow Tug, who calls himself a skyger, through a secret door in the basement of his apartment building and into Zoone, the bustling station where hundreds of doors act as gateways to fantastic and wonderful worlds.

But some doors also hide dangers—and when the portal back to Earth collapses behind them, Ozzie gets more than the adventure he bargained for. With the help of a friendly blue skyger, a princess with a peculiar curse, and a bumbling wizard’s apprentice, Ozzie will have to fix his only way home . . . and maybe save the multiverse in the process.

A surprise visit . . .

When a purple-princess and a skyger arrive in Ozzie’s living room, he knows it can only mean one thing: the door to Zoone has reopened, and he can finally return to the bustling station at the heart of the multiverse.

But something’s happened at the nexus. Ozzie’s friends aren’t visiting from Zoone—they’re escaping it. Now, if he wants to make it back to the place he loves, he’ll have to contend with portal pirates, a polluted world, and an army of deadly robots.

The story behind the story
—in the author’s own words

The Books of Zoone came together from many different threads.

Though I didn’t start writing the books in earnest until 2014, the first threads began to weave together in 2007 when I had this idea of a boy walking into his living room after school and finding a lion on his couch.

The second thread came from one of my favorite childhood books, The Magician’s Nephew by C.S. Lewis. That book features a location called “The Wood Between the Worlds”, where pools leading to different worlds sit amidst the trees of a mystical forest. I adored that idea and had always wished that Lewis had returned to that location and made more out of it. I eventually decided that I could do that myself, so created Zoone, which is the nexus of the multiverse. Like Lewis’s idea, Zoone is a forested realm with a thousand portals leading to a thousand worlds. The difference is that instead of pools as entrances to the worlds, Zoone uses doorways.

Which leads me to the third major thread, and that is my love of doors. I have always felt that doors tell stories. Traveling the world, I always tend to spot doors and their interesting features. I wonder where they lead to, and how the characteristics of the doors reflect what is sequestered behind them. I photograph these doors and now have hundreds of doors in my collection, coming from all over the world—the UK, Ireland, continental Europe, Asia, and here at home in North America. The photo collection has become a little more tangible in recent years. People have started giving me old skeleton keys or door knockers. (Okay, admittedly, some of those people are me.)

General themes and connections

The power of potential
Is potential a positive or negative force in our lives? Can we be stuck in potential?

Trust and teamwork
Ozzie is able to overcome Crogus and his apprentice by drawing on the power of friendship with Fidget and especially Tug. What sort of qualities are important in building a “team”?

Society and culture
Zoone is a place where cultures collide. As Ozzie learns when he visits the nexus, not all cultures share the same beliefs, rules, and attitudes. How can we work together with people who are different from us?

Prejudice
Many characters, such as Captain Cho and Tug, have assumptions made about them because of their worlds of origin and their appearance. How do these characters’ personalities challenge the preconceived notions about their worlds?

Unconventional families
Ozzie doesn’t have a typical family, though he certainly has a loving and caring relationship with his aunt. What makes a “real” family?

Self-identity
Ozzie isn’t what is so often considered to be a typical boy—he isn’t good at athletic activities, he’s afraid of creepy-crawlies, and he loves reading. What make us . . . “us”?

Ready-made printable files
Print your own Zoone key

Visit the link below to access the file to 3D-print your own version of Aunt Temperance’s Zoone key. Once it is printed, you can paint it with a variety of metallic paints (remember, it’s an old key, so you might want to paint it to look tarnished).

You can also attach a leather cord to it so that it can be worn around the neck—especially important if you’re planning to dress up as a Zoone character for a Halloween or book celebration event.

Design your own multiversal travel sticker

Design your own travel sticker for a world that might be connected to the nexus of Zoone.

Step 1:
Complete the brainstorming questions below.

What is the name of your world? Brainstorm a few options.

__________________________________________________________________________

__________________________________________________________________________

__________________________________________________________________________

What are the official colors of the world?

__________________________________________________________________________

__________________________________________________________________________

What is your world known for? For example, is it a specific landmark, like a canyon or waterfall? Is it a specific type of creature, like a dragon or a unicorn? Is it a famous building, like a skyscraper or tower?

Step 2:
Design the sticker using the supplied template.

Maker-space opportunity
Build a class suitcase or “steamer trunk” out of cardboard and decorate it with the stickers. You can buy wooden boxes from a craft store or build your own from cardboard.
Travel sticker templates
Design your own key-ticket for Zoone

Using the provided template, design a tag for a key to Zoone. If you want to use this tag as inspiration for a story, then do some brainstorming by completing the following questions.

Where is the key found?
For example, it could be found in the attic or tucked between the pages of an old book. Perhaps it is a gift.

How is it found?
For example, while cleaning the attic.

Who finds the key?

What message goes on the key tag?
You can write a rough copy here, and then put the good copy on the provided template.

Maker-space opportunity
Buy a set of “antique” keys from your local craft store and attach the ticket-tags to them. The keys can also be decorated with acrylic gems, gears, and other fun items to make them look unique.
Key ticket templates
Cut out around the dotted lines once your design is done.
The traveler’s suitcase ~ the outside

Design and decorate the outside of the suitcase. Remember to consider this important question: Who owns this suitcase? A wizard? An exotic pet owner? A dragon smuggler? Or . . . ?
The traveler’s suitcase ~ the inside

Draw the items that are inside the suitcase of a traveler to Zoone. Who does the case belong to? What sort of items are they packing for a trip?
Write the perfect “just-be-you” day

Aunt Temperance says that weekends are for “Just-be-you-days.” What is a “just-be-you” day for you? In the space below, describe your perfect “just-be-you” day. You can use a separate sheet of paper, if necessary.

Design a wizard trading card

Taking inspiration from The Secret of Zoone, invent your own wizard who might attend the Multiversal Convention of Wizardry. After brainstorming some details for the wizard by answering the questions below, use the supplied template to make a “trading card” for the character.

Brainstorm some names for your wizard:

________________________________________________________________________

________________________________________________________________________

________________________________________________________________________

________________________________________________________________________

What world does your wizard or wizardess come from?

________________________________________________________________________

________________________________________________________________________

________________________________________________________________________

________________________________________________________________________

What is the specialty of your wizard or wizardess?

________________________________________________________________________

________________________________________________________________________

________________________________________________________________________

________________________________________________________________________

What does your wizard or wizardess look like? Also, think of some of their tools: wands, staffs, pouches, books, cauldrons, and so forth.

________________________________________________________________________

________________________________________________________________________

________________________________________________________________________

Wizard trading card template

Illustrate a picture of the wizard or wizardess in the upper box, but the name in the lower box, then add a list of details about the character, such as home world, specialties, and power level. Cut out around the dotted line once your design is done.
Create a painting for the multiversal menagerie

In The Secret of Zoone, Tug references the art exhibit called “The Multiversal Menagerie.” Imagine a painting from that exhibit, showcasing an imaginative creature. You can draw your creature on a blank piece of paper, or paint it on a canvas. Afterward, your class can have its own art exhibition of creatures from the multiverse!

Don’t forget to consider the following questions below so that you can make a placard to go with your piece of artwork . . .

Artist name:

________________________________________________________________

Year created:

________________________________________________________________

Medium:

________________________________________________________________

About the creature in the painting:

Design your own doorway to adventure

Use the shapes and space below to design your own doorways. There is also space for you to draw your own design, or sketch details such as doorknockers, handles, hinges, and keys. Remember to think about the material it might be made of (wood, metal, or something unusual like water). Once you have designed your door, you can do a final illustration on a blank page.
Write about your doorway to adventure

Write a scene about a character who discovers a secret doorway. This scene might grow into a longer story, but writing the initial scene in which a character finds the door is a great way to get started! Before you begin, consider the brainstorming questions below:

Who finds the doorway? Add a few detail, such as name, age, and personality.

________________________________________________________________________

________________________________________________________________________

________________________________________________________________________

________________________________________________________________________

________________________________________________________________________

Where does your character find the door? For example, in a back alley? An attic? The basement? Deep in a forest cave?

________________________________________________________________________

________________________________________________________________________

________________________________________________________________________

________________________________________________________________________

________________________________________________________________________

How does your character open the door? With a key? (If so, where did it come from?) A spell? By solving a riddle?

________________________________________________________________________

________________________________________________________________________

________________________________________________________________________

________________________________________________________________________

________________________________________________________________________

What does your character find behind the door? A treasure? A magical land? Or . . . ?

Design your own moto

Design your own moto that might inhabit the world of Moton. What sort of features will your moto have? Will it be a dangerous moto, or a gentle and kind one like Scoot? Doodle some ideas in the white space of this page, or on a separate page. When you are done, you can write a short story or instruction manual for your moto.

Brainstorm some names for your moto. How does the name match your moto?

________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________

What are some of the special features, tools, or attachments of your moto?

Design a pirate flag for The Empyrean Thunder

What would the flag for Captain Traxx’s pirate ship look like? Design your own version of the flag using the template below.
Write about an alternate life

Imagine that you were like Ozzie and thrust into Klaxon's Destiny Machine. What do you imagine an alternate life for you might be like? Would it better? Worse? Or just different? Write about a day in this alternate life. You can use a separate sheet of paper, if necessary.
